MIDDLEBURY in the News

Acting Dean of Men Appointed; Dean's Office Reorganized

HARRIS E. THURBER, a member of the Middlebury faculty, has been named Acting Dean of Men for the 1955–1956 academic year, according to an announcement made recently by President Samuel S. Stratton.

Simultaneously, Dr. Stratton announced a re-organization of the Dean of Men's office which provides for the appointment of Frederick F. Neuberger, '50, as Dean of Freshman Men and Director of Men's Residences.

Mr. Thurber, an Assistant Professor of Political Science received a Master of Arts Degree from Vermont in 1949 and one from Princeton in 1951. He is now completing work for his Doctorate which he expects to receive later this year from Princeton.

In addition to his academic duties, Professor Thurber also served as freshman football coach for four years. He holds a captain's commission in the Army reserve and is active in the strategic intelligence unit at Middlebury.

Professor Thurber will replace W. Storrs Lee, '28, who has been granted a year's leave of absence from the deanship duties under the terms of the Walker Furlough Fund. Dean and Mrs. Lee expect to spend the year in the West Indies.

Mr. Neuberger is now Assistant Director of Admissions at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, N. Y., a post he has held since leaving Middlebury three years ago where he was Assistant to the Dean of Men.

A 1950 graduate of Middlebury, Mr. Neuberger is a native of Pittsfield, Mass.

The position of Dean of Freshman Men is a new post at Middlebury established for the purpose of co-ordinating the guidance and counseling of freshmen and supervising their work and activities. As Director of Men's Residences, Mr. Neuberger will be in charge of the dormitory proctors. During the coming year, Middlebury will return to separate dormitories for freshmen.

Raymond J. Saulnier, '29, has been nominated by President Eisenhower to be a member of Council of Economic Advisers.

Tuition Increased

Tuition for Middlebury students will be raised from $700 to $800 per year beginning next fall, according to a recent announcement made by President Stratton. In addition to the tuition raise, the activities fee will be lowered to $14, making a total tuition-activities rate of $814 for both men and women as compared to the present $774 for men and $748 for women.

The new activities fee will include charges for class dues, Undergraduate Association dues, CAMPUS, and "Kaleidoscope." The other items previously covered under the activities fee will now be included in the new tuition rate.

The added revenue from the raise will be used in part towards salary increases for faculty and additional instructors. Plans are being considered, according to Dr. Stratton, to enlarge the size of the faculty next year.

Increasing operating costs have made the new rate necessary. It is an unavoidable trend in small colleges, especially those in the East, to use similar means to enlarge their income, Dr. Stratton said.

WITH THE OPENING OF BATTELL CENTER—new women's dormitory, students enthusiastically moved into their new campus home. Here are a few glimpses of "moving day": 1. Jane Cameron, '57, Patricia Miller, '57 and Stephanie Eberth, '57, arrive with some of their belongings. 2. Carol Jardine, '57, smiles as Margaret Perry, '57, exclaims "what did I bring this for." Margaret formerly lived in Porter House. 3. Catherine Rock, '57, and Margaret Houck, '57, place some of their belongings in the book rack of their first floor room. 4. The boys helped the girls with the heavy work of moving and had the rare and last opportunity of a visit to the dormitory rooms. That afternoon, another panel concerned itself with "What are the results of man's changing image of himself on his everyday associations." Taking part were Dikran Donchian, advertising executive; Dr. Margaret Benz, New York University professor; Spencer Parrat of Syracuse University and Clayton Jones.

Robert R. R. Brooks, Orin Sage professor at Williams College, served as moderator and delivered the summary address Sunday morning.

In summing up the conference, Dr. Brooks said that if we interpret man's nature as meaning man's behavior, then we must make an affirmative reply to the question "Is man's nature able to change?" Those ethical standards which man today incorporates into his image may not have been there yesterday and may change by tomorrow. The difference between the "what is" and the "what ought to be" is not absolute truth but the byproduct of the individual's position in a particular culture.

Concepts of good and evil have evolved from reconciling conflicts between the individual and his social group, he continued. Under ordinary conditions the individual is able to exist with only minor conflicts with a group. Often, however, the individual becomes so dissolved in the culture that his concepts of good and evil become meaningless. Moral and ethical standards change in such a situation only when there is a clash between the ideas of an individual and those of the group, or when a situation of crisis forces change. While the new concept is held by a minority it is often considered evil, but if the same concept comes to be held by the majority it is then considered moral or good.

Dr. Brooks considered Dr. Klein's application of science to human nature. Just as people [Continued on page 18]

The Alumnae Trustees of the College made a two day visit to the campus in early March as guests of the Women's Undergraduate Association for the purpose of becoming better acquainted with College life from an academic standpoint. Mrs. Gertrude Cornish Milliken, '01, Mrs. Evelyn Plumley Adams, '25, and Mrs. Alice Guest Howson, '30, attended classes and chapel with the students. The Trustees also attended a meeting of the Women's Undergraduate Association for the purpose of learning about the workings of the women's student government. Pictures above were taken during the visit. 1. Mrs. Howson, Lucy Boyd, '56, (left) and Nancy Walker, '55, are shown during dinner in Forest East. Campus Commentator

THE liberal arts objective and the roles of extra-curricular activities and student government at Middlebury have been defined and discussed by the Deans of Men and Women and by President Stratton in reply to a request by the leaders of the undergraduate governments.

Walter Beevers '55, president of Men's Undergraduate Assembly, and Jane Robinson '55, president of Women's Undergraduate Assembly, sent to Dr. Stratton a letter asking for definitions of "(a) The educational purposes of the College, including the meaning of 'Middlebury liberal arts' and the place of extra-curricular activities; and (b) The place and scope of student government."

Dr. Stratton asked Dean Kelly and Dean Lee to draft statements to cover the above points. These statements and his approval of them he relayed to Beevers and Miss Robinson.

In reply to the request for a definition of the liberal arts objective of Middlebury, the Deans repeated the one adopted as adequate by the Faculty Educational policy committee in 1947: "A liberal arts education in a democratic society is based upon the concept of the dignity and worth of every individual as a human personality. The ends of such an education and the means employed should in all instances be governed by this concept. The student should become acquainted with the cultural heritage of Western Civilization. He should be taught to see his own special field in its relation to the whole body of knowledge and total pattern of society, to distinguish between means and ends, to examine generally accepted ideas, prejudices, and mass opinion, to think critically in order to form independent judgments. The results should be on the part of the student, the attempt to realize and develop his own capacities and responsibilities as a citizen and human being."

The Deans felt that extracurricular activities, insofar as they fall within the scope of the above definition, should be treated the same as curricular activities, although more informally scheduled. Certainly included in the definition are such types of activity as: "The Conference, Entertainment Program, Debating, Language and Science Clubs, organizations devoted to serious choral or instrumental music, and some publications work." Athletics are recognized as a needed complement to intellectual pursuits, even though it is possible to overemphasize men's sports.

Social events were considered most difficult to fit into an educational plan since, while necessary, they too often assume more importance than the serious phases of college life. But the Deans believed that effort to regulate social activities is largely wasted. "Any normal individual will always be faced with choices on expenditure of time or energies. Students may as well begin facing them while in college and learn through experience what can be undertaken without jeopardizing main purposes."

Student government, the Deans believed, is one of the most worthwhile of the extracurricular activities educationally, "for learning to run one's own affairs and the affairs of his community is an important part of education."

The Deans quoted a statement on the place and scope of student government which was sent to all men in the three upper classes in August 1953. Part of this statement read: "Through representatives of one of the student organizations you have a voice in all phases of college life. . . . It is your job individually to give (your prerogatives) the protection they need. Through the Educational Policy Committee, you can present your case for an improvement in the curriculum; through the Assembly, you can air your grievance against a regulation that appears unreasonable; through the Student Life Committee, you can lobby for a change in social legislation; through Blue Key, you can argue for a pet custom you want altered; through the Proctors, you can call for better order in dormitories; through the I. F. C. you can urge changes in interfraternity relations. All of your education is not confined to class rooms."

After mentioning their policy in recent years of "Freedom with Responsibility," the Deans added that the only sufficient reservation they had in endorsing the above quotation was with regard to the Student Educational Policy Committee. "We do not feel that undergraduates should be encouraged to trespass on the responsibilities of the faculty and administration for determining educational policy. Provision should be made for criticism of educational facilities and personnel, and opportunities given for suggesting changes and additions to the curriculum, but to give anyone the impression that students are allowed to help determine college educational policies gives a cheapening effect to all concerned. Determination of academic policy has no justifiable place in student government."

"To promote a successful student government, authority has to be shared in good faith; there is no way that sharing can be faked. It means surrendering to students a definite area in government which we are sure they are competent to manage, and if there are any reservations they have to be specified when the surrender is made" in order not to jeopardize the whole system.

Dr. Stratton added that he was "optimistic that with the clarification made by the Deans there should be even closer cooperation between student government and the offices of the Deans and that student-administration conflicts should be reduced to a minimum with resulting benefits to the welfare of the entire College."

More than 1200 people attended the four sessions of the 13th annual Middlebury College Conference, March 18-20. Professor Stanley E. Hyman of Bennington College opened the Conference on Friday with the keynote address, "Psychoanalysis and the Climate of Tragedy." President Samuel S. Stratton also spoke briefly. He welcomed the panel participants and audience and gave a brief background on the Conference's beginnings.

Two panel sessions Saturday discussed the Conference topic, "Man's Changing Image of Himself." The morning session dealt with the more specific question, "Is man's changing image of himself contributing to a new concept of human nature."

Participants on the morning panel were Dr. John Hutchinson, of Williams College; Robert Ingersoll, publisher; Dr. Jennie Klein, of the University of Buffalo, and Dr. Ewen Cameron, Canadian psychiatrist.

with our FACULTY

By Professor John G. Bowker, Dean of the Faculty

THE New York Herald Tribune carried a feature article a few weeks ago entitled "Educators Worry About the Colleges." Three prominent college presidents, Harvard's Nathan Pusey, Brown's Henry Wriston and Swarthmore's Courtney Smith, feared that in offering what the public wants and in yielding to the pressures primarily concerned with survival in a society growing more and more complex, we are in danger of lowering the quality of our education to a point where it may slip into a servile relationship with our very own culture. They deplored the popular misunderstanding of the purposes of higher education and cited instances where prominent men of influence had referred to recent trends in academic offerings as "experimental garnishing of a tossed salad."

Such skepticism is not confined to people dissociated with the educative process. Just before Christmas a letter reached Dr. Stratton's desk signed by the two presidents of our Student Undergraduate Associations, asking for a clarification of "the educational purposes of the college, including the meaning of 'Middlebury Liberal Arts'." The Undergraduate bodies are considering the advisability of uniting into one joint student government and they deemed this question of paramount importance in relation to their new constitution.

The student inquiry was answered by citing the definition of the Objectives of a Liberal Arts Education which was adopted by the Faculty Educational Policy Committee in November, 1950 and which I have asked the Editor to display on this page. This definition has come to be known as the "Munford Report" since it was the proposal of a subcommittee headed by Professor Howard Munford of the American Literature Department. The faculty has long been concerned about these objectives and the means of preserving a genuinely liberal arts curriculum. That our students have recognized the fundamental importance of clear definition of purpose is most gratifying.

The public lack of appreciation is quite understandable. College news is focused on educational façade. We play up non-educational achievements, and ideas only if they border on the sensational. We don't advertise what we are offering. Many have no idea what it means to pursue learning almost for learning's own sake, for vision, for preparation to "examine generally accepted ideas . . . to form independent judgments." We must constantly reassess the old, preserve the good, discover, test and evaluate the new. A college education becomes a danger if any one of these basic elements of appraisal is omitted.

Too many people remain essentially afraid of new ideas, afraid to question, afraid of the thought that possibly all truth has not yet been discovered. Everyone is expectantly excited about new discoveries in science, about the use (or abuse) of atomic power; but the thought of similar discovery in economics, sociology or religion is faced with distrust and fear. A liberal arts education in which the student is encouraged to "examine . . . prejudices and mass opinions . . . to realize and develop his own capacities and responsibilities as . . . a human being" lays the foundation for overcoming such fears.

Parents have too frequently insisted that education in the liberal arts insure higher earning capacity. Without doubt it does, but we have a most unfortunate situation when a young liberal arts student nervously tries to fit his immature abilities into some avenue which will "pay off." We, at Middlebury, have succumbed to popular demands somewhat. Training for the vocations has wormed its way into the older, established curriculum. We have, of course, no vocational or professional schools, but some 20 to 25 per cent of today's Middlebury men undergraduates are labeled pre-engineering, pre-medical, pre-law, etc. We have a faculty committee appointed by the President to promote these pre-professional school plans. However, a four-fold academic program is required of each student: relatively intensive work in one field of planned study with the passing of a General Examination at the end of the four years as a degree requirement; a study of cognate fields and subjects related to the major, each student guided in his choice by a faculty member of his major department; and at least a full year of exposure to each of the other two divisions of our curriculum made certain by Group Requirements for the degree. The details of this program are constantly subject to review and change by the faculty. At this writing a sub-committee of the Educational Policy Committee is investigating the courses designated "Group A" to determine that each is achieving the objectives of a course in the Humanities. Within recent years the faculty has re-examined all courses open to freshmen; except in the languages, only those courses of a survey type in any field are now available to entering men and women. The freshman courses in English, sociology, philosophy, political science, history, and even mathematics are broad. We try not to cover only the elementary phases over and over again but strive to hit the vital and controversial levels. Primarily, our educational organization is centered around the development of ideas, but the four-year curriculum far from excludes devotion to a field of specialization. The combination increases the effectiveness of both types of study.

The Objectives of a Liberal Arts Education

A liberal arts education in a democratic society is based upon the concept of the dignity and worth of every individual as a human personality. The ends of such an education and the means employed should in all instances be governed by this concept. The student should become imbued with our cultural heritage. He should be taught to see his own special field in its relation to the whole body of knowledge and total pattern of society; to distinguish between means and ends; to examine generally accepted ideas, prejudices, and mass opinion; to think critically in order to form independent judgments. The result should be on the part of the student the attempt to realize and develop his own capacities and responsibilities as a citizen and human being.

The ROTC At Middlebury College

By Lt. Col. Charles W. Adcock, Professor of Military Science and Tactics

Middlebury college's first group of Reserve Officers Training Corps graduates will receive their second lieutenant's gold bars at Commencement this June. Although the Department of Military Science and Tactics has been a part of the College only three years, a small number will have completed the four-year program. On a one-time basis, in view of the newness of the unit, twenty-one of these students were permitted to pursue the second and third year ROTC courses concurrently during the 1953–54 academic year. These students plus two transfer students bring the total to twenty-three who will complete their ROTC training on June 13, 1955.

While the number of new officers graduating from Middlebury is small in comparison with the total number commissioned throughout the country, their importance as individuals to the National Defense Program is no less significant than a ROTC graduate from any other school. The primary source of officers for the Army today is from graduates of the ROTC program. There will be approximately 14,500 new second lieutenants completing the program this year. After graduation these officers will attend a three-month officer's course, in the branch of the Army to which assigned, to learn the tactics and techniques of that particular branch. Upon completing this course they will be assigned to units within the United States and overseas and will serve until their two-year active duty tour has been completed. The assumption of authority and exercise of command comes early in the education of these individuals trained for military leadership. Young men in executive training courses and in their early job assignments usually wait years to exercise the authority and responsibility that a young Army lieutenant bears every day of his military service. Planning and directing unit training and operations, instructional duties, personnel and disciplinary matters, and responsibilities for the circumstances of men and equipment daily challenge the judgment and keenness of the young officer.

Since the establishment of the ROTC unit at Middlebury in the summer of 1952 the size of the Cadet Corps has grown, the accomplishments by the Cadets have been numerous and the Military Department facilities have been greatly improved.

The ROTC enrollment at the beginning of the present academic year reached 400 compared to an initial enrollment of 240 in 1952. With the beginning of the fourth year of operations next September it is expected that the Cadet Corps will reach its near maximum and normal size of between 425 and 450 men. A necessary expansion in courses offered has accompanied this increase in enrollment. In the first year only the freshman course (Military Science I) was offered. Last year Military Science II was added; and, in addition, Military Science III was offered to those juniors who took both MS II and MS III concurrently. These juniors comprised the first group from Middlebury to attend ROTC summer camp at Fort Bragg, N. C., where they put into practice the theory learned in the classroom at College. This year the senior course, or Military Science IV, was offered to complete the phase-in of military classes.

During this three-year period two events have been instituted as annual functions in which the entire Cadet Corps appears before the public. The first of these is a ceremony on Veteran's Day, November 11th. Although tribute is made to the living who have fought in past wars, the program is presented primarily to honor the men of Middlebury College who have given their lives while in the military service. This ceremony closes with the traditional three-volley salute by a firing squad and the playing of taps, after which the Cadet Corps passes in review.

The second annual event is the Federal Inspection each May when a team of inspectors from higher headquarters visits the campus. The inspectors time is spent in checking classroom instruction; going over the Military Department records pertaining to training, administration and supply; and inspecting both Department personnel and ROTC students as to appearance, knowledge, and military discipline to ascertain that the Army's objectives are being met at this institution. The final phase is the Review at Porter Field put on by the entire Cadet Corps. At this ceremony awards are presented to those cadets who have given an outstanding performance throughout the year. The awards are presently sponsored by the Vermont Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Association of the United States Army and The Military Department.

Student interest in the ROTC program has increased to the extent that several activities of a military nature have been [Continued on page 18] initiated. One of these has been a military club open, by selection, to any member of the ROTC Cadet Corps. Although an advisor is furnished by the Military Department, the club is controlled by the students. This club is now in the process of obtaining official campus recognition through the College student government. The purpose of this organization is "to provide its members with those benefits and experiences gained through association with and examination of matters, educational and social, not otherwise provided by the Military Department; to assist in continuing the close and efficient relationship in military matters with the administration, faculty, and student body; and to encourage and develop, among members, the highest ideals of the military profession." This military club has adopted the name of "The Guards." The selection of this name has historical significance at Middlebury College, since an organization by the same name was active on the campus during the Civil War. It was composed of all able-bodied male students and was commanded by a Professor Seely. This group had arms and uniforms and participated in daily drills.

During drill periods this past fall another project was undertaken when each of the four cadet companies sponsored a crack drill squad. These squads practiced during regularly scheduled drill periods and prior to Thanksgiving recess, competition was held among the four. The audience, which consisted of the entire Cadet Corps, was treated to a fine display of fancy drill and maneuvers as well as seeing one of the squads smartly dressed in white leggings, belts, helmets, rifle slings, gloves and military scarfs. It is expected that these drill squads will form the nucleus of a crack drill platoon which will give a demonstration as a part of the review during the Annual Federal Inspection.

Another innovation for the present academic year will be the selection of an honorary cadet colonel from among the senior women. Nominations will be made by the cadets who will also choose four civilian faculty members as final judges. The honorary cadet colonel will be outfitted with a cap and cape of school colors and will have an active part at the review during the Annual Federal Inspection.

In the fall of 1953, Middlebury College constructed an addition on the east side of the World War II Memorial Field House to accommodate an increased number of personnel in the Military Department as well as additional equipment and material that became necessary for instruction. These facilities which were occupied in January 1954, include office space, a supply room, armory and a five-point rifle range for use with .22 caliber weapons.

With the construction of the rifle range practical work in rifle markmanship was included during the freshman course. This past fall a ROTC rifle team was organized which participated in postal matches with teams throughout the country as well as firing in the William Randolph Hearst Trophy and Army ROTC Intercollegiate Matches. Interest has been growing steadily, and the future should see Middlebury riflemen well established among intercollegiate rifle teams. The range facilities also have been made available to women students who have shown considerable interest in this new field of campus activity. Consideration is now being given to the formation of a Middlebury College women's rifle team that would compete against similiar teams from other colleges.

Since 1940, millions of men have served their country. Under existing laws it is a requirement that men of draft age are liable for service and it is apparent, in view of world conditions, that this situation will continue during the foreseeable future. Support of our Nation's Reserve Forces is a basic requirement of good citizenship. Thus, the ROTC also offers one an opportunity to make his military service a more substantial contribution to the security of the country. Those students taking only the first two years of ROTC, which are required, are better prepared to discharge their service obligation when inducted. In addition their chances of early promotion are improved.

Students in the basic course who are desirous of electing the advanced course may be deferred from Selective Service induction through the Military Department. If selected for the advanced course, this deferment continues until graduation. During the last two years students receive pay and allowances amounting to approximately $700. The advance course students are placed in positions of command during weekly drill periods. As the ROTC program has as its primary purpose the developing of officers, it is of the utmost importance that each individual be given the opportunity to cultivate the qualities of leadership, the ability to command and the habits of decision. These opportunities exist primarily on the drill field where the individual has a chance to work with others. The Military Department has as its objectives the development of responsibility in the individual and the development of leaders of men.

The General Military Science course taught at Middlebury prepares the student for positions of command and develops in them the essential knowledge and characteristics of an officer. It embraces subjects common to all branches of the army so that graduates may be offered commissions in any branch depending upon the Army's needs and individual student training. This program is the ideal type for a liberal arts college which is organized and equipped to give students a comprehensive knowledge of the arts and sciences. The addition of General Military Science to the list of subjects provides selected students with one more field of study within the scope of Liberal Arts. The National Defense Program benefits directly by having within its ranks men with a comprehensive college background.

The twenty-three students who complete their ROTC work in June are the first to leave this institution and carry with them both Army commissions and degrees. Initially they will serve their country, as many Middlebury men have done in the past, and secondly they will follow their civilian pursuits developing their careers and supporting the National Defense effort by continuing their military endeavors as Reserve Officers in their own communities.

doubted that science could prevent smallpox, so now they doubt science's ability to cure mental illness. A few years may prove that there are definite connections between the laboratory and human personality.

Despite the tragic picture of man presented by the Freudian outlook, and the criticism of the Neo-Freudian-Christian psychologists, Brooks felt the Conference suggested man should accept some form of reconciliation which would assist humanity toward perfection. —Lucy A. James, '56
